

Ongoing Education

For a future as yet unwritten

IT'S BEEN SAID THAT ONCE YOU open your heart to someone, anyone can come in. That may or may not be as true as it sounds, but it definitely works on other levels. For instance, most songwriters will tell you that once they embark on the process of writing a song, all kinds of ideas for other songs come along for the ride. People who enjoy crafting essays and short stories will often remark that a side road in the story develops into its own tale entirely. Creativity is one of the characteristics that separates human beings from other animal species on the planet, and creativity rarely travels alone — think: vocabulary. With that thought in mind, let's explore the philosophy that is fueling our desire to take our books back into the college campuses of the United States.

Anyone who's ever attended college will have recognized that there are people there who have no clue about, nor care for, where their lives are headed. Sure, it would be nice if this group could be totally converted — right now, but they rarely are. They may hop on for the trip, but we won't spend a lot of time thinking about reaching those people. The people we are interested in reaching are those who are there for further education; they want to make a difference in their earthly orbit, and college is the place they hope to find some inspiration. These people, hopefully, are the ones who will find solutions for the woes of the world, or at least, solutions for the people on the street where they live.

Our Heavenly Father is intently interested in people who want to make things better, and with His help they will find solutions that work and that more successfully grease the wheels of the world. And let's do recognize this: once the mind is willingly opened to receive education — of any kind — the learner will find it easier to absorb education of another kind. With our books in place on the desks of the students, Heaven has an opportunity to draw eyes to them. It might be a while before germination of the seeds contained in those books takes place, but grow they will. And when one day those who stand for the Kingdom of Heaven have an opportunity to see where their first convictions took hold, they will see that their trust and faith grew from the opening of their minds to the instruction given to them from Heaven in the books so freely scattered about their campuses.

It is the spark of life given from God that causes creativity, the desire to look for something better, a wish for a clearer view. Imagine a world without a telescope, a microscope, the lightning rod, or libraries filled with writing to inspire us. There is a world to save, and if you are sowing seed for the Kingdom, you are guaranteed a bountiful harvest. Your gifts for this project are working — keep them coming!
