

Trumpets Blowing Around the World Signs, signs, signs ... giving us warning ... giving us hope

THAT DEAR OLD PLANET EARTH IS BREAKING down should come as no surprise to anyone with half an eye on the news. Every day brings tidings of yet another earthquake; another flood; another disease; another disaster. Forget civil unrest for a moment and focus alone on the chaos at play in the natural world; things are crazily out of balance.

In the daily half hour it takes to inform viewers of the “important” things going on in the world, we might learn of a bank scandal, an escaped convict on the loose, or yet another group of madmen fighting to control their neck of the world. But notice that a growing portion of the time is taken to tell us that wildfires are out of control; floods are washing the world away; animals used for food are sick and contaminated.

If one were inclined to believe the tales of the Evolutionist, there would be cause for much rejoicing, because all these woes would be seen as a sign of planet earth improving itself; the unnatural behavior in the natural world could be seen as nothing more than self-help exercises for a lump of rock and soil with high aspirations.

If, however, one were inclined to believe the testimony of Jesus in the Bible, there would still be cause for rejoicing — not because these global calamities should be seen as refinements for the better, but because the catastrophic upheavals on the planet are a sign that the end of all things is at hand.

The reality of trouble on the planet is a fulfilment of the predictions given by Jesus recorded in Matthew 24, Mark 13 and Luke

21. Since humanity was put out of the Garden, there have been rough weather, earthquakes, famines and wars — nothing new. What is new, though, is how close these horrors are getting to everyone’s front door; seems like you can’t turn around without bumping into a friend or a relative who’s seen these things with their own eyes.

Looking down the ages, Jesus gave us a sign to tell us when we’re close to home. If you’ve ever traveled, you might remember how welcome are the signs along the road that tell you how far you are from your destination, especially when it’s dark and late, and you’re oh, so tired. That, according to the World Wildlife Fund for Nature, the world has lost half its wildlife in the past 40 years should be a road sign telling us that there is just a short way to go. It’s dark ... we’re tired ... not far now.
