

Where To From Here? Sometimes it's neither here nor there....

Oddly enough, one of the toughest things to do is tread water when there's no sign of land. Though, obviously, it takes very little effort to just kick back and relax, keeping still doesn't come easy to us. In the long run, being still when you're adrift at sea is one of the safest things to do. You have no idea how long you'll be out there or what creatures are waiting to bite at you. The more you thrash around, the quicker you use up valuable energy, and the more you attract the attention of undesirables, both of which have the capacity to end your life prematurely. Our natural tendency is to panic—both at what we can see, and at what we cannot. Should've stayed on shore.

Add to the dilemma the sight of an approaching storm on the horizon. And now you hear the sound of thunder. You have no idea how long you'll have a calm sea; the storm may just pass you by. Circumstances seen and unseen are crowding your troubled mind. Your present circumstances are the result perhaps of mishap, rather than accident (been meaning to fix that hole in the hull for a long time). And you're thirsty, surrounded by water that cannot satisfy. It's getting a little darker, and you begin to see lights on passing vessels; but no one sees you. The waves obscure you from the view of anyone who might be looking for you. It seems like all is lost.

But then, from above, from a vantage point that offers a view like no other, comes the sight and sound of the rescue helicopter. Your many long hours of waiting, hoping are finally at an end. You are lifted from the waves to safety, and are finally overcome by tears of relief.

Life can often be as uncertain as this; everywhere we turn we can see no way out; maybe see no path at all. Viewing the world from our office, the work of book ministry can often be so very perplexing. Consider for example that we print and distribute books by the tens of thousands. We could just as easily print and distribute books by the millions. It's just as easy to call the press and order a million books, as it is to call for fifty thousand—a far sight cheaper per-item, too. But apparently, because of financial constraints, the current plan calls for the printing of smaller numbers. We lament the reality that we cannot do as much as we would like. As we consider the technology in place for reaching the people on the planet, we wonder why more people aren't calling us and asking us to conduct a distribution in their city; a Community Mailing project to their zipcode. But...

- With your help, we have been busy reaching where we can, giving books to both the lost and the seeker in cities worldwide.
- With your help our prison ministry continues, and, through the printed page, hope streams in to those looking for light.
- With your help we continue to send books into the great cities across America.

And we will patiently be about our work till we are all rescued from above. Thank you for being a blessing to Mission World. ●
